Civil society and TTIP negotiations

- Why there is a need for civil society to follow the TTIP negotiations?
 - Because EU trade policy is more complex and more contested
 - There is a need to prove that EU policy delivers and bring benefits for majority of the EU companies

European Economic and Social Committee

Civil society and TTIP negotiations

- 1. EESC follow-up of the TTIP negotiations
- 2. European Commission effort towards transparency
- 3. Public opinion perception

EESC recommendations for civil society participation in the TTIP

- Welcomes the institutional proposal of the European Commission for civil society monitoring for the whole agreement through the domestic advisory groups
- Calls for the possibility of joint meeting of the advisory groups and possibility to address joint recommendations
- Creation of the Civil Society Forum of TTIP as a tool for transparency and information on the implementation of the agreements
- EESC would like to play a role in TTIP monitoring

European Economic and Social Committee

Updated

The EESC notes with satisfaction that in the recent proposal on the institutional set up of the agreement includes the creation of Domestic advisory groups (DAGs), composed of civil society representatives and competent to advise the parties on the application of the agreement. The Committee welcomes the fact that the mandate of DAGs is widened to cover any issue of interest under the agreement, an old claim of the EESC that is finally accepted by EU negotiators. It regrets however that the two DAGs are not foreseen as members of a joint consultative body for EU-USA civil society organisations. This body should be able to meet at its own initiative and issue joint recommendations to the Parties.

Regarding the EU chapters on TBT and SPS, the opinion acknowledges that proposals on standardisation, technical regulations, as well as marking and labelling are important for gaining access to new markets. However, it recommends “more detailed work on marking and labelling requirements” and “further reassurances that EU food legislation will not be changed”.

The EESC commends the Commission’s commitment to transparency, but urges it to discuss with the US the possibility of making later texts available to the public, or at least to the EU Advisory Group.

The EESC has an important institutional role to play in TTIP negotiations. The purpose is to develop a cooperative approach to trade policy between the European Commission and civil society.
